Santa Fe Area Climate

Santa Fe enjoys a semi-arid climate. Due to the 7,000 foot elevation, summers are extremely mild with warm sunny days and cool breezy nights. Air conditioning in Santa Fe is seldom necessary. Because of Santa Fe’s location nestled between the Sangre do Cristo Mountains to the east and the Jemez Mountains to the west, winters are usually mild although nights are often below freezing. The low humidity and clear blue skies free from smoke and smog make Santa Fe one of the most healthy cities in the United States. The sun shines in Santa Fe an average of 300 days a year.
